Description:

About the Author Robyn Johnson's many years as a senior art director working on various high-profile fashion accounts served her in good stead in the writing and illustration of The Enchanted Dolls' House. But even more important were her two "wonderfully critical" daughters, Holly and Darcy, with whom she lives in Melbourne, Australia. She is currently finishing a second title about Albert and Lucinda's romance, The Enchanted Dolls' Wedding.

Mansfield wrote "The Doll's House" while seeking tuberculosis treatments in Switzerland. The story first appeared in the London periodical The Nation and Athenaeum, and one year later was published as the title story in a story collection entitled The Doll's House and Other Stories. Like other works by Mansfield, "The Doll's House" is an example of early literary modernism, a stylistic movement characterized by the use of interior monologues and multiple points of view. The story is notable for its use of free indirect discourse, a style of third-person narration that allows the narrative voice to slip freely in and out of characters' interior monologues.
