This item is printed on demand - Print on Demand Neuware - Thesis (M.A.) from the year 2006 in the subject American Studies - Literature, grade: 2,7, University of Bamberg (Professur für Amerikanistik), 58 entries in the bibliography, language: English, abstract: In this thesis paper, each of the three black autobiographical writings will be discussed in chronological order. The paper begins with Frederick Douglass s Narrative from 1845, continues with W.E.B. Du Bois s Darkwater from 1920 and finishes with The Autobiography of Malcolm X from 1965. The purpose of this chronological organization is to better trace the development of black autobiographical writing over the period of 120 years. Each autobiography s discussion is divided up into three distinguishable components. A summary of each memoir provides a background against which the further stylistic and thematic discussions can be attempted. Secondly, the historical circumstances, basic structure and narrative techniques of the respective eras of black autobiographical writing and of the specific works will be discussed. The purpose is to closely look at typical features (or, in the case of The Autobiography of Malcolm X, genres) of black autobiographical writings in...

Frederick Douglass, the most influential black man in 19th-century America, wrote 1,200 pages of autobiography, one of the most impressive performances of memoir in the nation's history. The three texts included Narrative of the Frederick Douglass (1818-1895) was an American orator, author, and leader of the abolitionist movement. Born a slave in Maryland, Douglass successfully escaped in 1838 by boarding a train headed north. As a free man, he published several autobiographical works detailing his experiences in slavery. Narrative of the Life of Frederick Douglass is widely considered to be the finest example of a slave narrative. Douglass became the first African American to hold a high government rank, serving as minister-resident and consul general to the Republic of Haiti. In the development of black autobiographical writing until the publication of Malcolm X's memoir in 1965, we can discern three phases. While each of these periods will be discussed in more detail in their respective chapters, a short introduction shall be provided here. This categorization again refers to Stephen Butterfield's Black Autobiography. The range of available secondary literature on Douglass, Du Bois and Malcolm X is enormous. Since this thesis paper will simultaneously discuss the formal and thematic development of black autobiographical writing, both types of literary analyses are included.

A Narrative of the Life of Frederick Douglass, an American Slave is a memoir and treatise on abolition written by former slave, Frederick Douglass. The text, first published in 1845, describes the events of his life and encompasses eleven chapters that recount Douglass' life as a slave and his ambition to become a free man. It is considered to be one of the most influential pieces of literature to fuel the abolitionist movement of the early 19th century in the United States. Frederick Douglass has been for some time a prominent member of the Abolition party. He is said to be an excellent speaker "can speak from a thorough personal experience" and has upon the audience, beside, the influence of a strong character and uncommon talents. It is an excellent piece of writing, and on that score to be prized as a specimen of the powers of the Black Race, which Prejudice persists in disputing. We prize highly all evidence of this kind, and it is becoming more abundant. The Cross of the Legion of Honor has just been conferred in France on Dumas and Soulie, both celebrated in the paths of light and literature. In Black Boy, Wright draws on the broad genre of American autobiography in order to gain a voice for himself and his people. Readers gain firsthand knowledge of the plight of black Americans in the post-Civil War South through the young eyes of Wright himself. Du Bois works within the hegemonic system to turn the pseudo-scientific and sociological inquiry back on itself, "objectively" identifying categories of white pathology. However, both Du Bois and Malcolm X ultimately fall back on white/black hierarchies of difference in their need to construct a normative black experience through cultural View. Show abstract.
